4 Meditative Mandalas

Colouring Books are not my forte...

One thing you've got to understand about me is that colouring books are not my forte. Don't get me wrong, I love them for myself and owned a few of my own before it (for lack of a better term) went viral. But I never, thought of creating one of my own until Lisa asked for contributions to her 5th anniversary as a Homeschool Blogger. I just knew I had to contribute to support and celebrate her, but I also knew my regular materials are way too dark for such an exciting celebration as this.

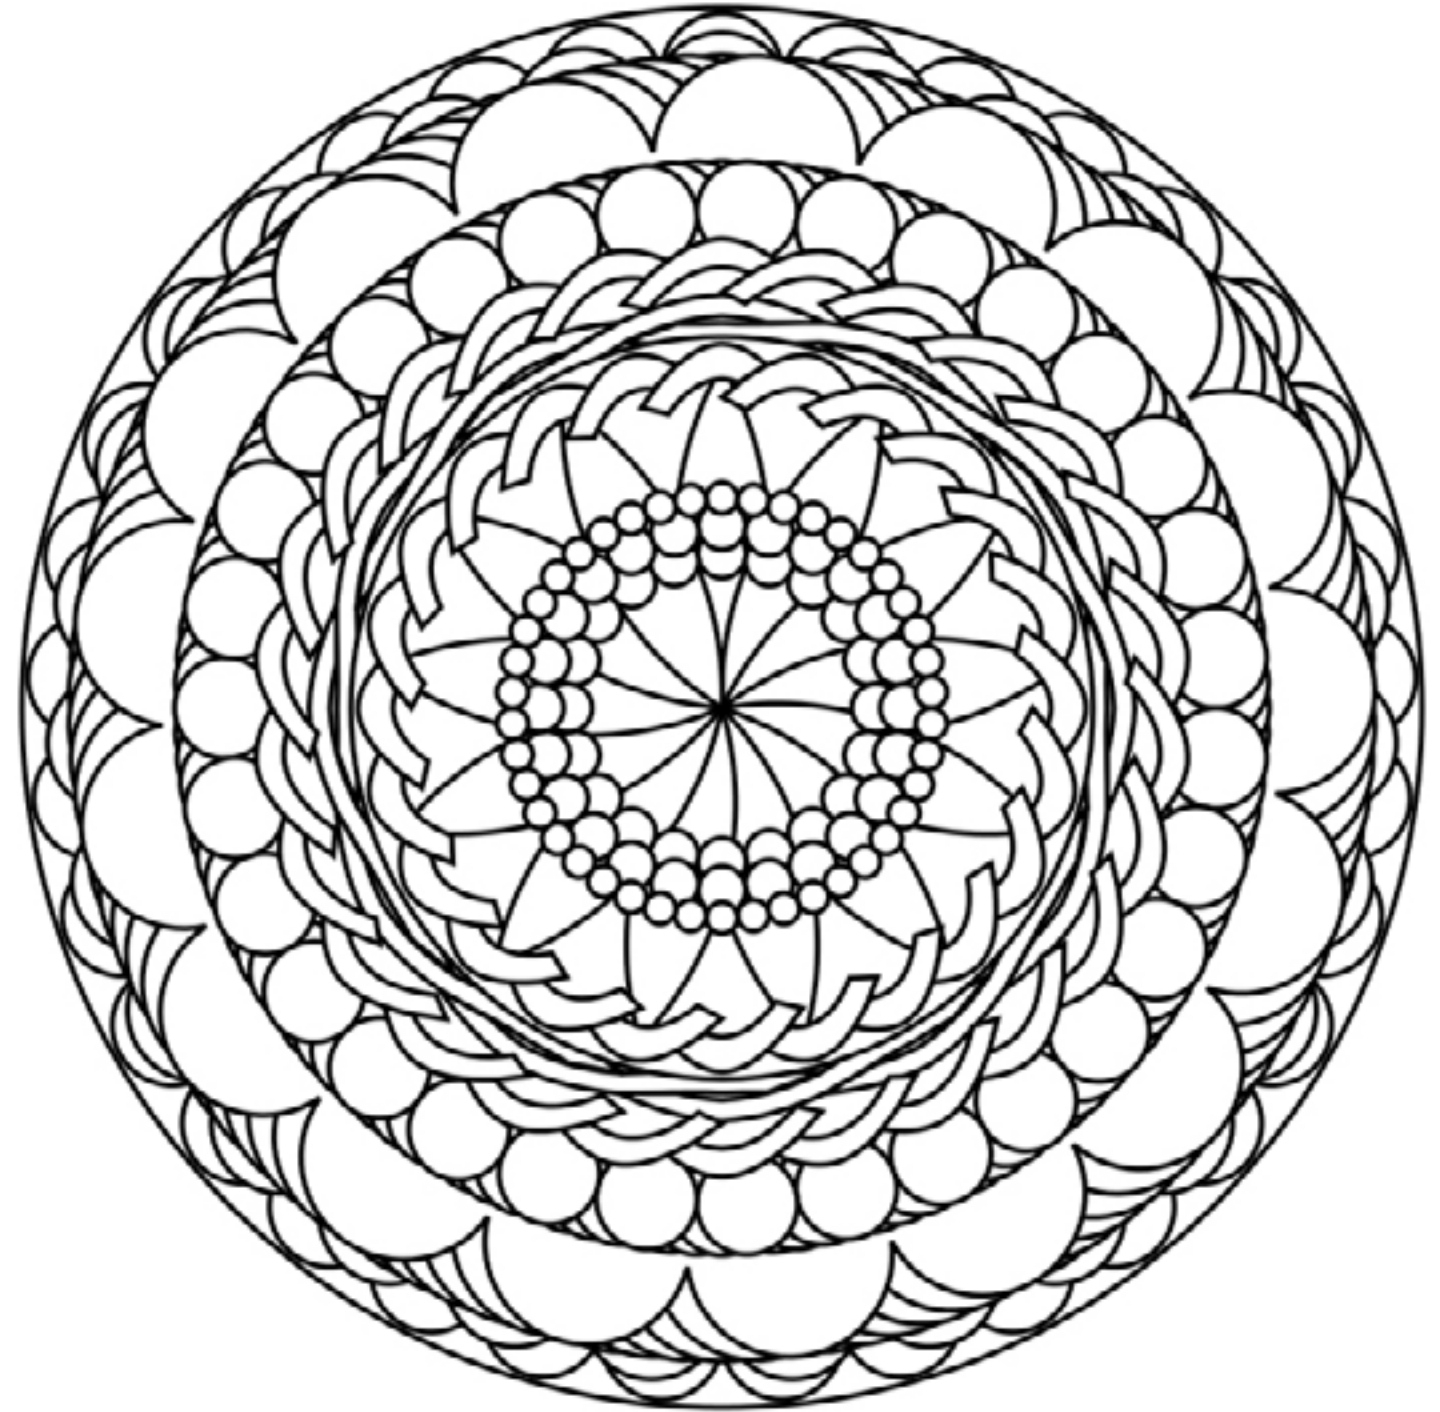

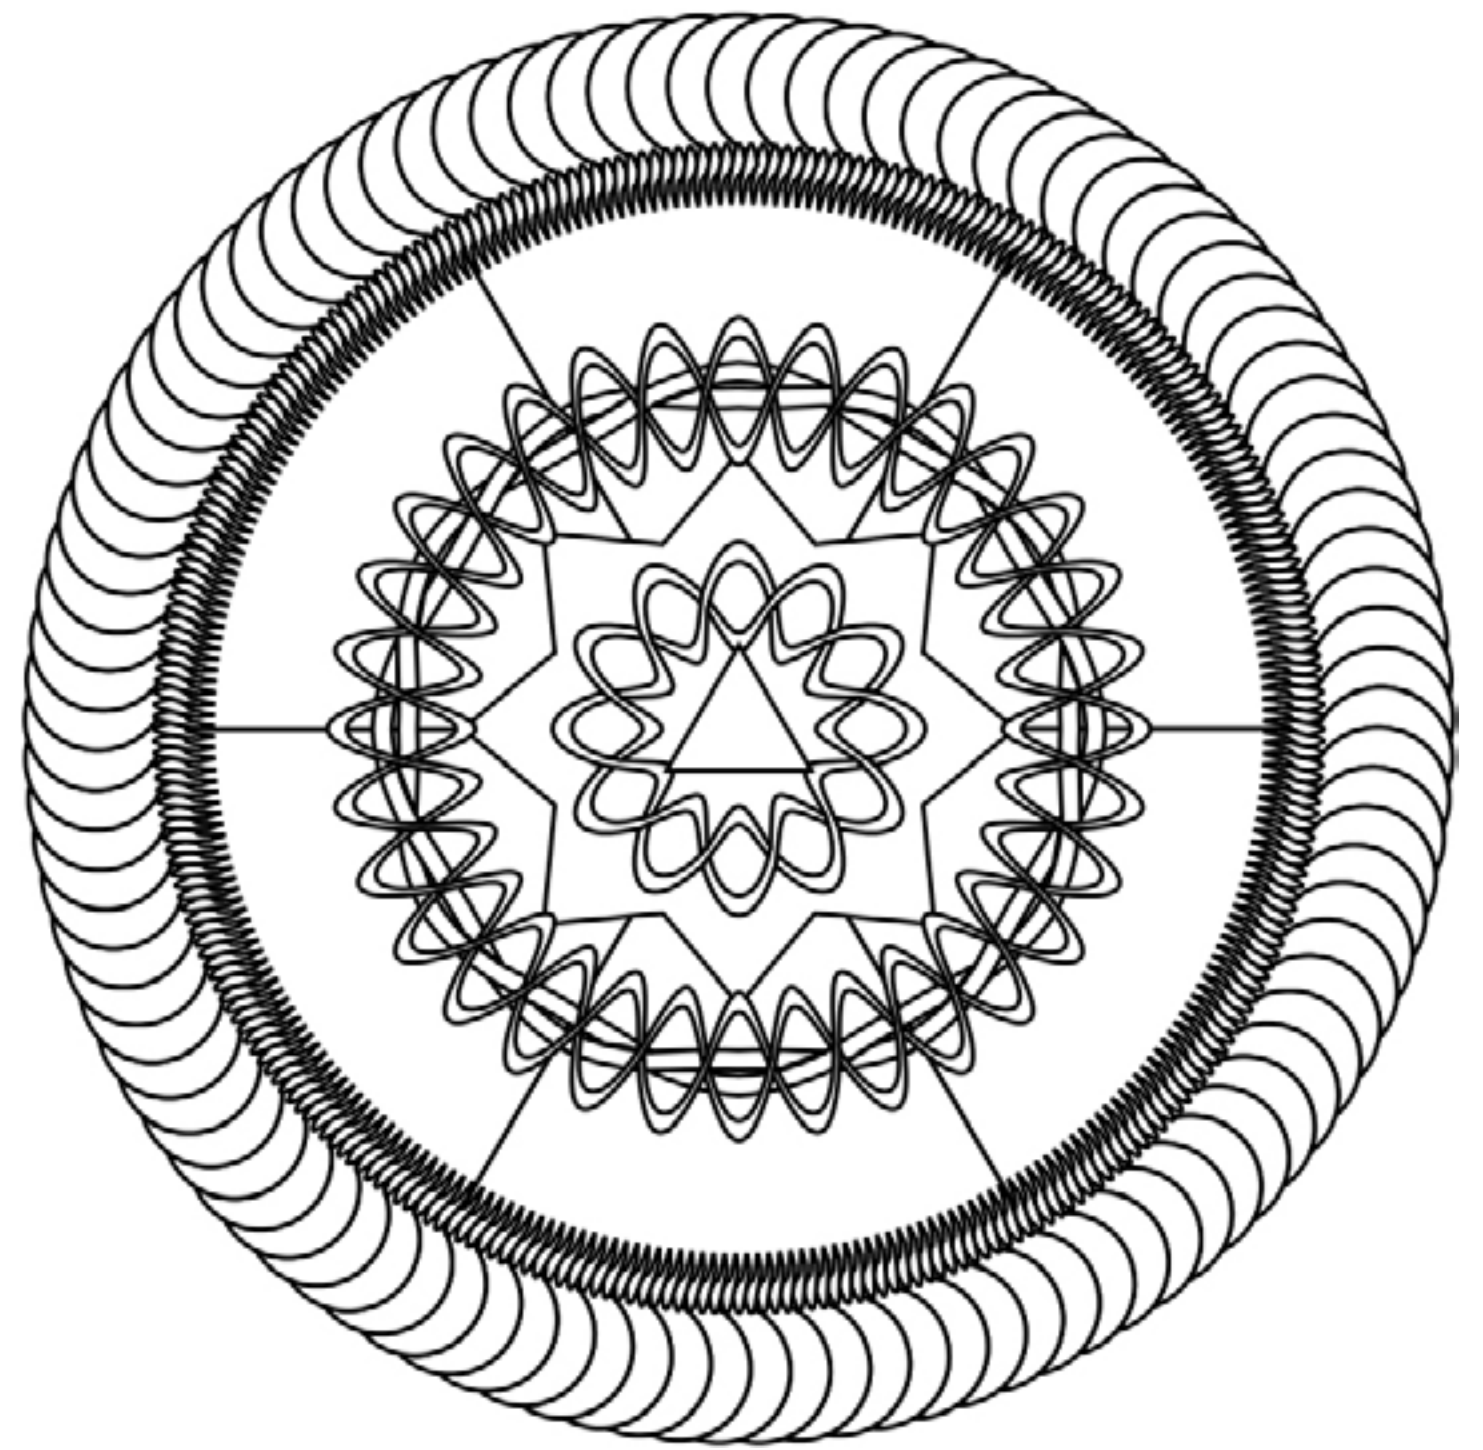

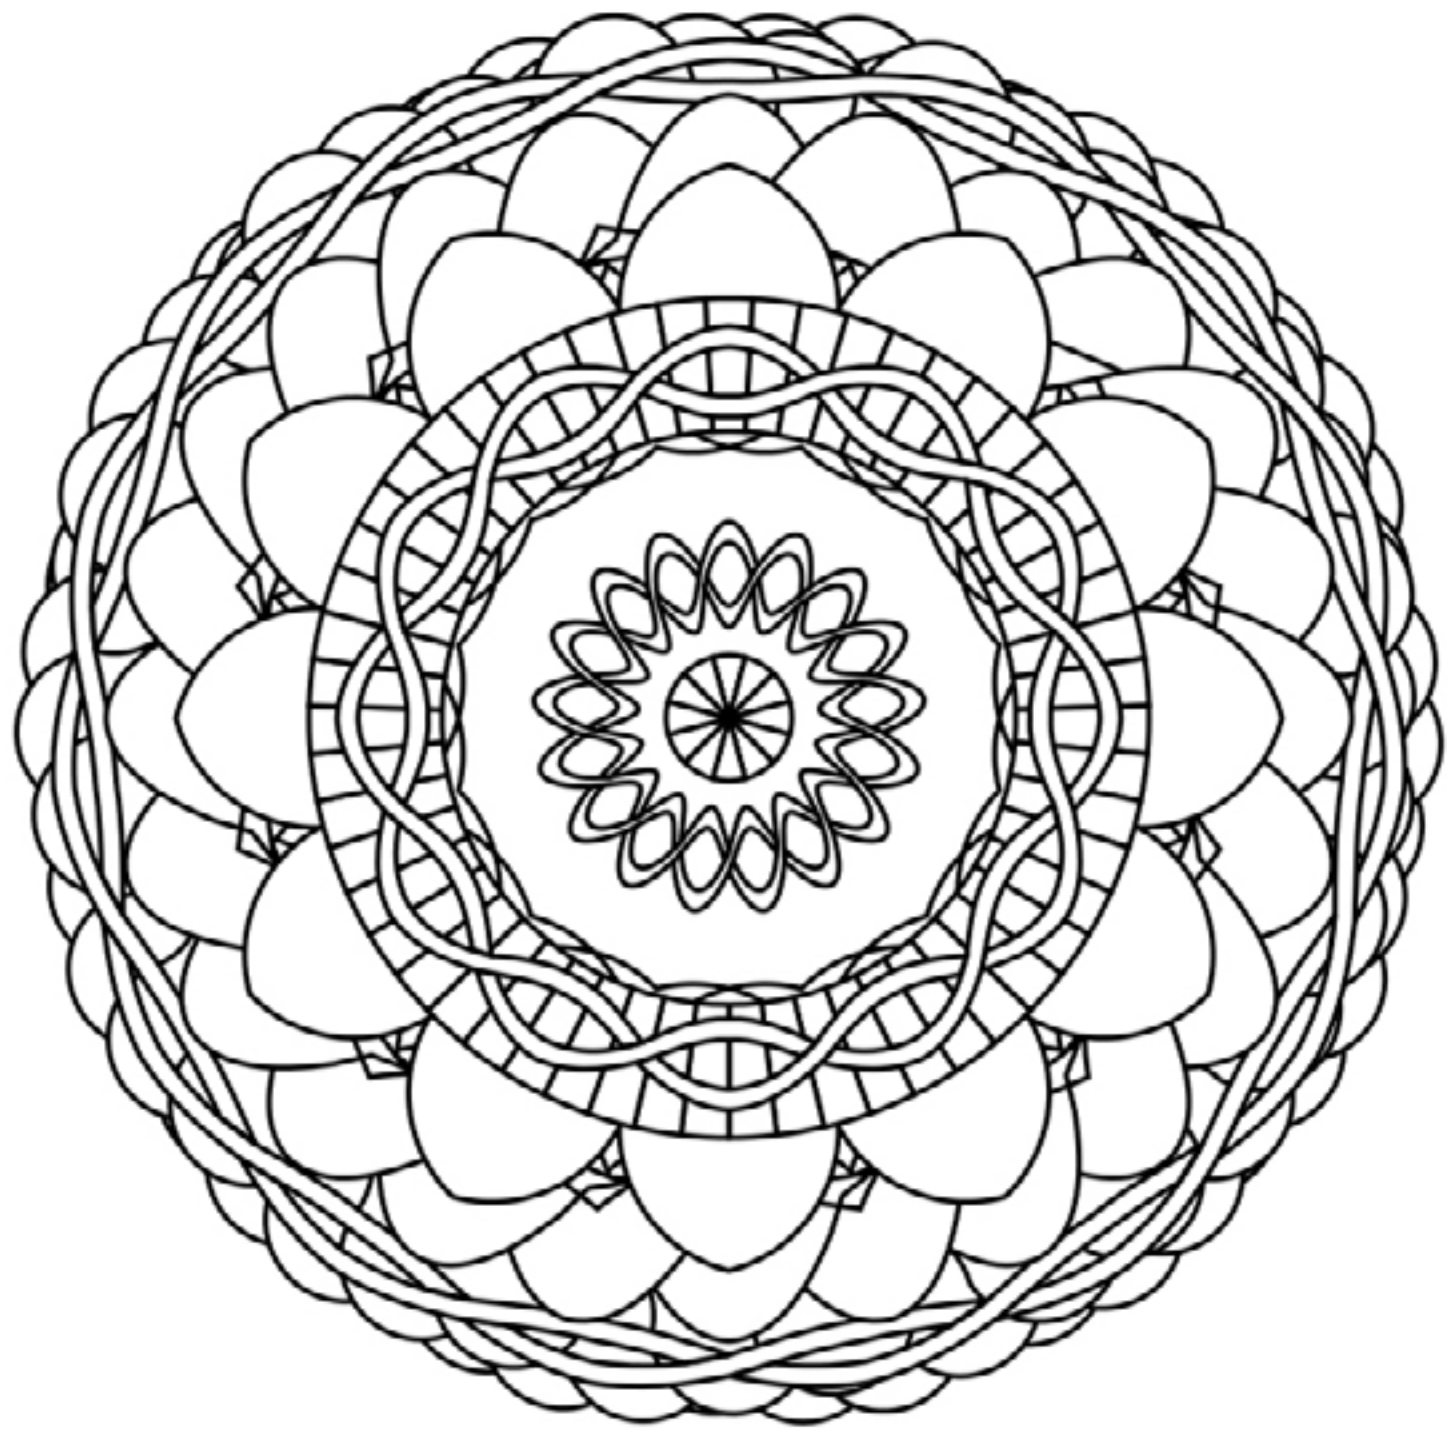

But they are my gift of celebration...

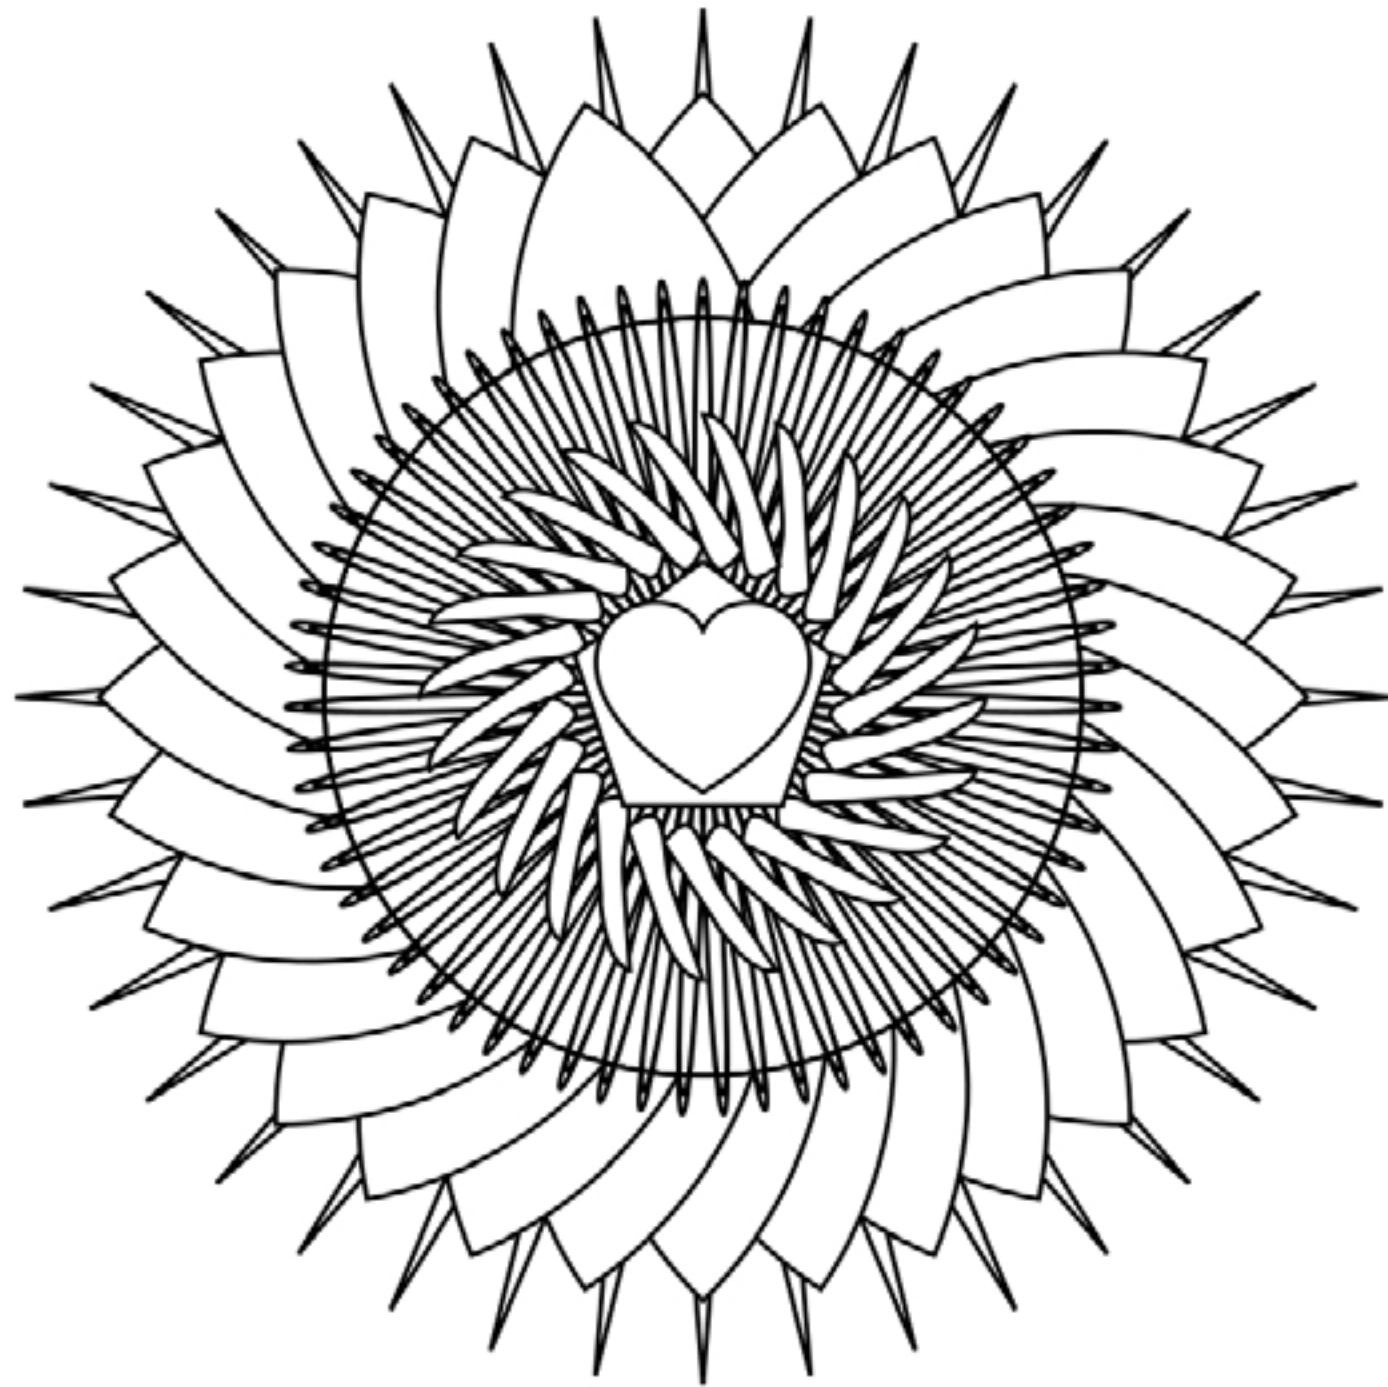

But the You see my target market is hurting people, entrepreneurs and want to be entrepreneurs who are living in or escaping from a hard relationship. Icky, dark but necessary stuff for the hope and healing I hope to bring to the world, but surely most of Lisa's homeschooling friends won't fall into this category and I'd hate to give a white elephant gift - I'm all about delivering real value to everyone I serve...and so Meditative Mandala was born.

And of raising awareness for my true passion...

Here you'll find four Madala colouring projects which are perfect for doing yourself, pulling out for older homeschoolers on a rainy day or any day you need the emotional boost that a bit of relaxing colouring can deliver. If you'd like more Mandala patterns to work with, be sure to check out my very special offer that entitles you to 20 more and help families in my community.

Want more?

I've compiled 20 more Mandalas available to purchase as a PDF collection just like this one for just $5, and a portion of the proceeds will be donated to Wellspring Family Resource Centre – a local-to-me organization that helps families cope with and recover from the affects of domestic violence.
